IRWIN J. CLASPILL BUYS THE NEWPORT SHOPPE FROM E. W. GRENAWALT

The dry goods and clothing store popularly known as the Newport Shoppe, on Newport avenue, was purchased this week by Irwin J. Caspill from Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Grenawalt, who recently announced their intention of retiring from business for the purpose of removing to a northern city.

Mr. Claspill is an experienced department store man and for ten years or more was connected with the well known G. H. Becker company of San Diego. Following the customary taking of inventory, Mr. Claspill states that he will secure a fine assortment of new fall and winter goods, and will continue the stock of dry goods, clothing, shoes and notions along the lines familiar at the Newport Shoppe. The new proprietor lays great stress upon the fact that he will follow the successful policy pursued by the G. H. Becker company of a "money back guarantee," while every effort will be made to please all patrons. Full details of new offerings will be given by Mr. Claspill in these columns from week to week. Watch for his regular business announcements.

There are lots of proud owners of Gilfillan Neutrodyne Radio Sets at the beach. They are all boosters for the Beach Radio & Music Shop, Bacon St., O. B.

MRS. HASLAM SELLS FIXTURES AND FURNISHINGS OF THE MAIN CAFE

In accordance with her intention of retiring from business, Mrs. Haslam has disposed of the fixtures and furnishings of the Main Cafe on Newport avenue, and will devote herself to her domestic duties at her home on West Point Loma boulevard. Following the closing of the cafe, it is rumored that a pool hall will be established in the building after the first of next month.

JAIL SENTENCES ON LIQUOR CHARGES

In the United States District court early this week, William Dunbar and Charles Doane, of 4811 Santa Cruz avenue, were each fined $1 and ordered to service five months in the county jail on liquor charges. On the admission by Preston Hiltbridge, of Pacific Beach, that he had manufactured whisky, but not sold it, Judge James sentenced him to pay a fine of $10 and serve 100 days in the county jail.

A SONG OF MISSION BEACH

Our world's a-smiling,
The broad sea's beguiling,
And I shall be wiling
Old "Time" from this land;
For Nature's best playground
Is right here at hand,
And in North, East or West
Its like can't be found.
So we'll take a firm stand
And keep it the best!

The blue bay provides us
A bounteous spread—
Fine fish for our table
From the depths of its bed;
Swimming and boating;
Sails beautifully wave
Their rippling canvas,
Out there a-floating.
What is there to wish for
In this tropical Southland—
Blue sky, sun and waters,
Clean air and beach sand.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Mission Beach Chamber of Commerce last Tuesday evening, an interesting talk on "Beach Horticulture" was given by F. A. Bode, a prominent landscape gardener, who exhibited clippings of various plants that he suggested as "hardy" specimens for this climate and soil. Many Mission Beach residents are interested in beautifying their home grounds, and found Mr. Bode's talk quite helpful. The members of the chamber were disappointed in not hearing from F. A. Rhodes, who was scheduled upon the evening's program. We all hope to hear from Mr Rhodes at our next meeting, deeming it of great importance to meet and talk with our city manager.

All those interested in North Mission Beach or territory beyond the Amusement Center please note and take the car marked "La Jolla" or No. 16 ONLY. This car also stops at the Center and various streets beyond. The M. B. Chamber of Commerce wants the world to come and see all of Mission Beach. The "pioneers" and "home-making residents" live mostly north of the Amusement Center. So take the La Jolla car (No. 16) and give us a call.

Good people in our community, we know you are boosters and wish to keep the world interested in our Beach. So don't forget to fill in the old cesspools and connect up with the fine, new sewer system now established. Keep our air uncontaminated by foul-smelling seepage and improve your property as well as your neighbors'.

Dear Folks: Attention, Please!

We have seven little tots registered for the much desired kindergarten class in our new Mission Beach school. We must secure eight more names to obtain the teacher for same. Tell your friends to come to Mission Beach for the winter and bring the wee children to our kindergarten. There's plenty of room for the older children in beautifully fitted school rooms, and no finer, healthier place can be found anywhere.

Mrs. L. E. Anderson and daughters, the Misses Maxine and Donella, are on their way to Miami, Florida, to join Mr. Anderson, who recently left to prepare a home for his wife and daughters. Judge C. B. DeLong hasn't been working this week. On vacation, he says. But we hear the splash of paint and see new evidence of "vacation labor."

A group of Mission Beach ladies entertained in honor of Mrs. V. F. Huffman of Arizona this week. The affair was held at one of the Harris cottages on Ocean Board Walk. Dancing and swimming, with a fine picnic luncheon, filled the gay hours. Those present were Mrs. V. F. Huffman, Mrs. J. A. Harris, Mrs. J. E. Morgan, Mrs. W. Gary, Mrs. W. Austin, Mrs. J. B. Mott, Mrs. H. Buckles and Mrs. Wm. England.

Ocean Theatre

NOTEWORTHY CHANGE IN SPECIAL FEATURE NIGHT WITH CURRENT BILL

Manager Ray Ericsson desires the patrons of the Ocean Theater to take particular notice of the change next week in the special feature night. Instead of the customary Tuesday and Wednesday added price attraction, the big feature film will be produced on Thursday and Friday with the booking of Zane Grey's "Light of the Western Stars" at 15 and 30 cents admission prices. It's a wonderful picture having the reputation of being far greater than the famous "Thundering Herd." Tomorrow night (Sunday) "Who Cares." will be produced with an all-star cast and on Tuesday and Wednesday, "Harry Carey will be seen in "Tiger Thompson." Extra good comedy forms an added attraction always.

Money for O. B. Water Mains

NINE THOUSAND AND SOME ODD DOLLARS AND "SIX BITS"

Following many delays from one cause or another, the efforts to get new water mains for several streets in line for paving have at last reached the point where the city council has adopted a resolution for the appropriation of the necessary funds. On recommendation of City Manager Rhodes, the sum of $9,718.75 was set aside for water mains on Bacon, Voltaire and DeFoe streets and West Point Loma boulevard. It is understood that the work of laying the mains will begin "before the snow flies" and the paving will follow in the dim and distant future.

Lure of the South Sea Isles

Written for "The Beach News"
By CHARLES H. DALY
(Book Rights Reserved)

What impressed me more than any other one thing is the honesty of the native, and I believe it to be an inheritance of the race. The room doors in the hotel are left unlocked, also the homes all over the island. In fact, locks and keys are not needed here. Several times I had my chamber girl under suspicion (I am sorry to confess), but the things I thought had disappeared I had misplaced. I went away on a trip for six days with my room left open, and when I returned everything was in place just as I had left them, and the barefooted chamber girl had everything in the room spic and span, plus the smiling face.

But what makes one feel sad is the prophecy that this lovely Polynesian race will soon be no more. It is estimated that the influenza epidemic of 1918 took for its toll more than 4,000 natives from the four main islands of this group, namely, Tahiti, Huahine, Morea and Borabora. And now the Chinese are coming into Tahiti in droves. During my short visit over 400 Chinese were landed at Papeete. And the French government is not doing anything to check this influx. The Chinese are buying up property, houses in the city of Papeete and plantations in the country. And if some action by that government is not taken soon to stop this horde, in ten years more the beautiful isle of Tahiti will be a second China. But the natives and others interested are asleep at the SWITCH!

About moral conditions on the islands? A great many visitors—and some writers—have in the past, and I presume will continue to do so in the future, harp on the immoral conditions on these islands. I will say that a great many of us are living in GLASS HOUSES, and if I may use the old adage, we, Americans in particular, should be careful how we handle a ROCK PILE. Yes, from our standpoint there is quite a considerable lot of sexual immorality. The natives undoubtedly will do things that we condemn in the open but will sneak around and do the same things under cover. I would use the words of Christ: "He that is without sin, let him cast the first stone." I understand that at one time a vilurent blood disease was very prevalent on these islands, but that the government now has it nearly eradicated in its acute form. Before the so-called civilized white men came to the Islands, it is said that this terrible disease was unknown.

All kinds of liquors are plentiful and cheap in Papeete, and it is of the best quality, as it comes in duty-free from France. I observed no intoxication among the natives, but no doubt it exists to some extent outside the city. Most of the arrests are caused by disorderly white sailors, who want to fight when they look too long on the wine. When a man is arrested for such an offense, he is just locked up for the night, and told by the jailer next morning at five to disappear. If we proportion the population of Tahiti, one would be safe to bet that there is not one-tenth the crime committed there that is committed in our country.

I made several auto trips to different parts of Tahiti, and they all seemed to excel the former one in beauty. Once I invited a native woman and her beautiful daughter to go with me. We passed through beautiful Ventura and stopped at the inn for refreshments. The inn is conducted in an excellent manner; the food is good and clean. We then went on the south end of the island, about eighty miles from Papeete. The native women could speak a little English. We crossed many nice streams of water rushing down from the mountains, and everywhere were fruits growing wild. We also passed two sugar mills. I am told that they make about 400 tons of sugar per annum, but the sugar is quite damp and of a brownish color. Our destination that day was Papenoo.

A few days later I planned another trip, up to the Fautau valley and waterfalls. The chauffeur took his sweetheart and another Tahitian beauty along. The latter could speak very good English. We took along a very nice lunch. Had I known in advance just what kind of a rough road we had to go over, I would not have gone under any conditions. The distance altogether was not over five miles. Every few minutes the driver would have to get out and remove obstructions—sometimes a fallen tree and other times boulders, from under the car. And all this time we went bump-bump. My head would hit the top of the car. And by this time the girls were singing at the top of their voices, and in between the songs they would be laughing. If there are any more joyful people anywhere in the world than the Tahitian girls, I would like a look at them. We followed the course of the Fautaua river, a fast-running stream of clear, sparkling water. At last we came to a stop, hemmed in by steep mountains on all sides, and all covered with beautiful trees and shrubbery, also wild fruit of many kinds. Such ferns and moss! Never have I seen anything to compare with them. A rustic bridge spanned the rushing waters at this point, also there was just room enough to turn the car. How the driver managed to turn the car without going over a high bank is a mystery to me. The car was a Dodge, and it's well named—it was a wonder in dodging boulders, trees, etc., and it was faithful through it all; no breakdown.

The Tahitian driver said he would go up the mountainside and get some fruit for our lunch. His sweetheart was soon equipped in her pareu, and plunging into the waters of the rushing river, she seemed happy as a

LOST BROOCH RESTORED TO OWNER BY A "CLASSIFIED AD"

In the Classified Ad column of "The Beach News" last week there appeared a "Lost" notice of a cameo brooch. Just two hours after the paper was published, the brooch was returned to its owner, Mrs. J. E. Dunbar, of Cape May avenue. Mrs. E. F. Oakes, of Long Branch avenue, had found the brooch in front of the new Strand Theatre, read the "Lost" notice and thus restored the treasured piece of jewelry to its happy possessor. Once again is proved the great axiom that "It Pays to Advertise."

SEWER ASSESSMENTS PRONOUNCED EQUITABLE

The city council last Monday overruled numerous protests, written and oral, against assessments for the new sewer in Mission Beach. A majority of the protestants thought the cost was too high, but the council decided the assessments were equitable.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

GIVE ENCOURAGEMENT

A WORD of encouragement in the dark hour is often followed by a ray of sunshine that lights up a human soul until the end of time!

And how little does the helpful word cost the giver!

Look at the burden-bearers passing you, dust-covered, sad-eyed and weary, trudging through the cold and the heat, conscious only of their aching backs, tired feet and breaking hearts.

Give them a smile as you meet them. See their countenance brighten and their feet step more lightly as they catch the meaning of your lips and know it is meant for them.

Encouragement makes people believe in immortality because it opens up new visions that reveal vistas and sensations never before seen or experienced.

It stirs new emotions, strikes new chords of music, give new hue to the sky, and awakens thoughts which have been lying dormant in discouraged hearts since they first began to beat.

Instead of censuring the being who has made a mistake, give him or her a kindly word of cheer. Treat him or her as you would like to be treated when your soul is filled with doubt and sorrowing.

Forget the great weighty sermons, the thread-worn parable of advice and conjure up a dainty little posy of encouragement and note how eagerly it will be accepted, sometimes with a twitching of the lips, a trembling, grateful hand and a happy tear.

Try it today on some of the human wrecks you may meet, scuffling along, groping in a dismal world of whose horrors you know nothing and habitually shun as you would a pestilence.

And after you have tried it, look into your own soul and see the new light that has been born there to cheer you in the silent night when you are alone.

A little more friendly intimacy with one another, a few more benevolent smiles, a trifling bit of consolation and a few small words of encouragement scattered here and there as you go along the beaten pathway would in a generation lighten sorrowing hearts, make the world brighter and better and possibly move it closer to heaven!

SUCCESS OR FAILURE?

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

IF YOU have made the weary smile,
If you have made the lonely glad,
If someone's load that someone had Seemed lighter for a little while,
If someone walked an easier mile,
Or someone better bore a grief
For words of comfort and relief
That you have said to help the sad—
Although you never found the gold
Of which you dreamed in dreams of old,
Will you the gods of luck assail
And call it failure when you fail?

Or, if the dreams you dreamed come true,
The dreams of wealth, the thoughts of pow'r,
Your name the subject of the hour,
Your house the privilege of the few,
Whatever greatness comes to you,
If none a kindness can recall,
The ones who need it most of all,
If you have brought no grave a flow'r.
No attic fire, no table food,
If you your goal alone pursued
Along a path of selfishness,
And then you won, is that success?

YOUR Last Name

IS IT WARREN?

THE simplest explanation of the name Warren is that it first belonged to a dweller at or keeper of a game preserve, warren being still used in this connection today.

However, there are others who contend that it, like Waring, Wearing and Warin, is derived from the French Guarin or Guerin. It is suggested that Guerin, the French name, was in turn derived from the German Warand, meaning protection.

The first of the name in this country was Richard Warren, who sailed from Plymouth in the Mayflower in 1620. He was not of the Leyden party but joined the little band of colonists off the coast of England. The fact that he was one of the few of the party designated as "Mr." indicates that he was a person of good birth. He was one of the third exploring party when the colonists arrived in New England, and was with them when they were surprised by the Indians.

He was spoken of as "grave Richard Warren," also as "a man of integrity, justice and uprightness, of piety and serious religion."

Richard Warren married in England a woman named Elizabeth, who came to this country a few years after her husband in the "Abb." She was a person of much distinction and was referred to always as "Mistress Warren," a mark of great respect.

After her husband's death she never remarried and this is pointed out as one of the rare instances of continued widowhood to be found in the New England colonies at that time. Richard Warren had five daughters and then two sons to carry on the traditions and name of the Warren family.

HOW TO MAKE A WILD WOMAN

WHO SAID

"Laugh and Be Fat."

THESE words seem to have constituted the philosophy of life of their author, Ben Jonson. Laughter and light-heartedness were the dominant traits of this renowned man of letters and to his easygoing, carefree disposition can be traced his constant state of poverty.

Jonson was a contemporary of Shakspeare and was a great friend of that great English writer. Probably his best known work is "Every Man in His Humor," a comedy that was produced at the court of James I and was so well received that the author was persuaded to present a new play there each year. Jonson's other works include, for the most part, poetry. One of his best known short efforts being the poem:

Drink to me only with thine eyes,
And I will pledge with mine;
Or leave a kiss within the cup,
And I'll not ask for wine.

The thirst that from the soul doth rise,
Doth ask a drink divine;
But might I of Jove's nectar sip,
I would not change for thine.

This poem has been set to music and has a prominent place in every collection of old songs.

In the year 1619 Jonson was appointed poet-laureate. This office carried with it a salary of $500 and the additional emolument of a butt of the best canary wine from the king's own cellar, but this was not enough to keep the extravagant poet. In addition to the allowance made him by the king, the city of London gave him a pension. But this, too, was inadequate for his needs and we find the life of Ben Jonson one round of debts after another. Jonson died in the year 1637 at the age of sixty-four. He was buried in Westminster Abbey.—Wayne D. McMurray.

Averse to Laughter

According to one authority, Moltke, the famous German general, only laughed twice after attaining years of discretion. Moltke would have indorsed Lord Chesterfield's indictment of laughter as "a low and unbecoming thing, not to mention the disagreeable noise that it makes, and the shocking contortion of the face that it occasions. I am sure that since I have had the full use of my reason, nobody has ever heard me laugh."

Charles Sumner, the American statesman, could make a similar boast; while, according to John Martineau, who was for some time a pupil at Eversley, Charles Kingsley never laughed.—Family Herald.

Mother's Cook Book

What we call luck,
Is simply pluck,
And doing things over and over;
Courage and will
Perserverance and skill
Are the four leaves of luck's clover.

EVERYDAY GOOD THINGS

IN SMALL families a roast of any size lasts for several meals and becomes rather monotonous, for no one likes to throw away good food. The best plan is invite one's friends to help eat the large roast. A few ways of serving appetizing roast beef may be helpful. There is no meat more enjoyed than thinly sliced roast beef, so one may serve it one day for luncheon or supper. A nice well-seasoned tomato sauce may be served with thinly sliced meat heated well in the sauce; then to finish up the rougher portions, put it through the meat grinder and prepare croquettes, or stuff green peppers and bake them.

Buttered Turnips.

Wash and pare turnips and cut into half-inch slices, then into half-inch cubes; there should be three cupfuls. Cook in boiling salted water until soft. Drain and add one-third of a cupful of butter. Season with salt, pepper, turn into a hot vegetable dish, sprinkle with a half tablespoonful of parsley and serve.

Emergency Dessert.

Take pieces of stale cake and let them soak in any fruit juice like cherry, strawberry, plum or pineapple. If none of these is at hand use orange juice with a little of the grated rind. Arrange the soaked cake in a pretty dish and pour over a custard using a pint of milk, two beaten eggs, four tablespoonfuls of sugar, a pinch of salt and any flavoring which combines with the fruit juice used. Serve with whipped cream or cover with a meringue and brown lightly.

Prune Ice Cream.

Cover a cupful of well-washed prunes with cold water and let stand overnight. Cook in the same water until soft, remove the stones and put the pulp through a sieve. Add a cupful of sugar, four tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, a pinch of salt and one and one-fourth cupfuls of heavy cream beaten stiff. Freeze as usual.

CAJUN CLINGS TO HIS OLD CUSTOMS

Modern Ways Make Little Appeal to Him.

The Cajun of southwestern Louisiana has his own particular customs, some of them handed down by his Nova Scotian ancestors, others of more modern invention, says Nevil Henshaw in Adventure Magazine.

Often, in naming his numerous children, he will stick to a single letter. Thus, in a family that has chosen the letter O, the boys may be: Odelon, Oliver, Octave, Ovide, Optah, Otis, Otto; the girls: Octavie, Odelia, Ophelia, Odile, Olive, Olita, Olympe, Omeah. This system, though pleasantly alliterative, must result sometimes in confusion.

As inevitable as his cup of black coffee is the Cajun's use of brick dust. This, pounded small, is scattered inside, and especially upon that shelf-like portion of his home which, however small, he calls a gallery. In its way it is ornamental, the dull red of the dust standing out against the dark weathered gray of the unpainted planking behind.

In the better class families the French proprieties are observed. Religious duties are seldom neglected. Saturday night balls, which last through until daybreak, are ended by the dancers attending mass in a body. Children are instructed fully in the principles of their faith with, sometimes, curious results.

I know of one boy who, having failed continually in his catechism class, was the despair of the kindly priest who taught him. In the end the good father resolved on a desperate measure.

"See, Toto," said he. "You have not passed, you will never pass. Yet you are a good boy and work hard. So I will give you your chance. One question now, an easy one, and you go through. On what day was the birth of our Lord?'

As he thought Toto's face was expressionless. He answered with marked uncertainty, "Good Friday."

The priest was patient. It was necessary to be so.

"Come," he pleaded. "Consider my question. It is a great day, one that we celebrate always."

At this a change came over Toto. His face flushed, his eyes glowed. Triumphantly he came out with it:

"Ah, mon pere, I know now. It is Mardi Gras."

Heavy Mountain Work

At El Milargo, 4,000 feet above sea level in a very lonely part of the cloud-covered Cordo Merida mountains of Venezuela, is one of the most unusual hydro-electric generating stations in the world. All of the equipment of the station, which supplies electricity to the Venezuelan city of Valencia, had to be specially designed so that it might be transported in sections on the backs of pack mules. Also with concrete and other supplies likewise brought to El Milargo by trains of pack mules the engineers in charge of this project have built a 2,000,000-gallon water storage reservoir and a concrete canal which diverts the water to the hydro-electric plant.

Famous English Park

Hyde park is a famous pleasure ground in London, a mile and a half long and three-fourths of a mile wide, extending westward from Picadilly to Kensington gardens and covering an area of 390 acres. It was formerly the ancient manor of Hyde, belonging to the abbey of Westminster, and was laid out as a park and enclosed in 1535, in the reign of Henry VIII. In Elizabeth's time, stags were still hunted there, and under Charles II it was used for horse racing. The "Serpentine," an artificial sheet of water, was introduced by Queen Caroline, wife of George II.—Kansas City Star.

Transvaal's Gold Output

The gold output of the Transvaal gold mines during May amounted to 813,249 fine ounces, valued at £3,456,308. As compared with the April totals, the increase in quantity was 25,730 ounces, and in value £109,352. Natives employed in the mines at the end of May numbered 172,982, as compared with 176,188 at the end of April. A bill embodying the findings of the De Villiers wage award, granting a 30 per cent increase to men now on a basis of less than £1 a day has passed the house of assembly.—Commerce Reports.

Roses in Southwest

Most curious are the wild roses of the dry Southwest. They are low-stunted bushes of brown branches and many straight brown or white prickles, more like a gooseberry bush. The fruit is all prickles like the prickly gooseberry of our swamps, says Nature Magazine. The flowers are purple, rose or white, solitary, more like a strawberry bloom than of a rose. As the bushes are built for heat rather than for frost, they are not easy to grow in northern gardens, though they will live and bloom.

Oldest Cigar Store?

Lancaster, Pa., claims the distinction of having the oldest cigar store in America. It has been in the Demuth family since 1770 and today is operated by Henry Demuth. The store is a museum for treasured relics, among them, the first bathtub in Lancaster county, more than a century old. It is built of wood, much after the fashion of a modern barrel.

BOUND TO RAILS, ESCAPES DEATH AS TRAINS PASS

Boy Victim of Bandits Describes His Sensations While Lying Helpless.

Mexico City.—Few youths of fourteen have gone through such a nerve-wracking experience as Casar Castro, student here, and lived to tell the tale. His escape from death, tied between railroad rails while a train passed over him, has all the earmarks of a film thriller, the only difference being it was real.

Young Castro, on his way to school one morning, was waylaid by robbers who whisked him off in an automobile chloroforming him at the same time. They relieved him of a gold watch, and when he regained consciousness several hours later he found himself bound, gagged and helplessly tied on the railroad tracks leading into Mexico city. He struggled in vain.

Lost Consciousness.

The boy's story indicates what must have been his feelings when the first of the several trains that were to run over him came along about 11 o'clock in the morning. It was a freight train. Castro says: "I considered I was dead as I heard the terrible noise of the approaching train. You have no idea what it is like to 'feel' the approach of what you think is certain death." Castro added he closed his eyes, prayed to God, and instinctively "made himself as small as possible," then lost consciousness.

"I Considered I Was Dead."

He regained it some time later. The train had gone over him without so much as tearing the clothes on his slender body. In the afternoon two more trains came along. Castro explained later that "although I was afraid, the morning experience made matters much easier for me, for I realized that if I made myself as small as I could the other trains would go by without touching me." Each time the trains approached the boy lost consciousness, but he came to in time to prepare for the next train.

He was found at 6 o'clock in the evening quite by chance and he was numb and unable to move.

Ethical Bandits Beat Pal Who Fires on Victim

New York.—For violating the ethics code of holdup men, as alleged, by unnecessarily shooting at an unresisting victim and thus risking a possible charge of murder, William Rentz, twenty-one, bears the marks of a severe beating administered by his two alleged confederates, who escaped.

Samuel Burger, taxi driver, was hailed by three men who, after driving to several places, was ordered to halt. Rentz, he says, alighted and held a gun against his breast while the others searched him, taking $12.

"As I drove off," said Burger, "two shots were fired at me, the bullets whistling past my head. Looking back, I saw the other men pounce on the gunman, knock the gun from his hand and proceed to kick and beat him. He put up a fight, and I stepped on the gas and ran around the corner for a cop."

Rescuers Drown

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Three men were drowned in the Monongahela river, one a suicide and the others his would-be rescuers. Edward and Langston Mitchell, negroes, met death when they attempted to save Joseph H. Waters, an attorney, white, who had jumped from a bridge within sight of scores of pedestrians. Joseph Duffy, who went to the aid of the brothers, was rescued by onlookers.

Bolt Toys With Man

Great Falls, Mont.—When William Black, thirty-eight, a truck driver, was struck by lightning in the oil fields near here, the bolt performed some freak things.

It broke his watch chain, welded together two silver dollars in his pocket, tore off both trouser legs and shoes and burned his hair.

He was unconscious for two hours, but will recover, physicians say.

COBRA SPITS DEATH FROM FIFTEEN FEET

Jungle Has Many Other Deadly Denizens.

To end a controversy over the death-dealing effect of a "spitting" cobra at a distance of 15 feet, C. Emerson Brown, superintendent of the Zoological gardens, is in possession of additional expert advice that upholds his contention.

"Publicity given the purchase of the deadly collection of snakes which were brought here from New York has aroused doubt in the minds of a number of persons who have informed me in writing and by telephone that they do not believe the snakes are so deadly," said Mr. Brown.

"One man wrote me he would not be afraid to face the pair of 'spitting' cobras at a distance of 15 feet, without any barriers between them. Of course, I do not believe he would, but he won't be given a chance, anyhow," added Mr. Brown.

Mr. Brown then offered a letter from Raymond Ditmars, curator of reptiles at the Bronx zoo, in New York, who is reputed to be the greatest authority on reptiles in this country. The letter reads:

"The black cobras that spit poison are the most dangerous of reptiles and can spit venom 15 feet with deadly precision and effect. At that distance, poison hurled 4 feet high on the glass of a case containing the species has clouded the glass.

"This condition prevailed here recently, when the cobras sent you and the ones here in the zoo were exhibited for the first time to visitors. The glass had to be washed so the snakes could be seen properly.

"Regarding the inquisitive gentleman who would face the cobras at a distance of 15 feet, he should equip himself with a bucket of permanganate of potash solution to duck his head in to counteract the effect of the venom.

"Such an emphatic demonstration or lesson in natural history as he would stage might teach him something tangible about the ways of African cobras, if he survived."

The "spitting" cobra, like those in the zoo, are black, with red blotches on their underside, and the ones in the zoo are six feet long and about three inches in diameter. The snakes are in specially constructed cages.

Of the seven deadly cobras in the zoo, Mr. Brown says the green cobra of the Mamba species is the fastest snake in the world and strikes beyond its length in any direction with its head about five feet from the ground. The green snake is twelve feet long, has long fangs and is less than one inch in diameter. Mr. Brown added the green cobra strikes without giving a warning, and does not have to be "egged" to do it, either.—Philadelphia Record.

Better Train Handling

Passenger engineers are studying the effect of "taking up slack" in a long train by riding in the rear of such a train under a plan devised for better handling effected by the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac railroad, according to Railway Review. In this way the enginemen are impressed by the fact that the handling of the train, which they thought performed with due caution from their cab, was attended with serious discomfort to those in the rear cars. The plan has worked out satisfactorily, not only from the actual physical experience of the enginemen's observations, but from the psychological factor which entered into the operation.

Had an Alibi

"Want to join the Legion, buddy?" asked a Legionnaire of a husky young man of about his own age.

"Can't; wasn't in the service."

"Why weren't you?" the veteran demanded.

"My intentions were good," was the rather reluctant explanation. "I went to a recruiting office where they put me in a room and told me to take off my clothes. A doctor walked up to me, looked at me kinda hard, an' then thumped me on the chest. I wasn't in the habit of letting strangers get rough with me, so I thumped his chest—an' I didn't get out of the hospital until the war was over."—American Legion Weekly.

Nature Was Before Them

At Bronson, Minn., Charles Falk chose a rainy afternoon for butchering his fatted hog because the weather was not suitable for other work, and with the assistance of a neighbor the necessary preparations were made. When everything was ready the men proceeded to the pig-house to administer the stunning blow, but to their amazement found the porker dead near the door. It was found that lightning had killed the animal.

Oil Does Not Freeze

A very precious oil, suitable for aviation, since it does not congeal even at a very high altitude, can be extracted from crickets, says consular advices to the Department of Commerce from Algiers.

Recently about 18 tons of crickets were sent to Holland from Algeria. Part of this quantity was utilized for feeding poultry, and from the remainder the oil for aviation purposes was extracted and has apparently given every satisfaction.

ELOQUENT MAN IS MASTER OF MINDS

Wondrous Indeed Is Magic Power of Words.

Bismarck objected to rhetoric, as a barrier to judgment. He was a sledge-hammer speaker himself, relying on a crushing weight of argument, not on subtle finesse, in a debate. Some disputants are wrestlers, some are fencers. He was one of the former, and he felt an instinctive distrust of those who rely on a swift play of wit, like the flashing thrust of a rapier, to confuse and subdue the adversary.

What is the power of words that some men use to captivate and hypnotize their fellows? Many a crook has flourished because he talked so well. The proposal that he brought would never bear the searching analysis of daylight, but he wrapped it in a veil of words, and it took on the glamor of romantic mystery, the light of a fresh dawn of adventure. As he expounded it, it began to seem worth staking the soul upon, the only thing to do in a world of humdrum materialism. If he poured the vials of his scorn upon the liberal horizons of science they seemed to wither and shrivel like dry leaves in a hot sun; but what he approved was made, in the mind's vista, to blossom like the rose and be fairer than a moonlit fountain in a soft green glade.

It was the magic language, beautifully composed—of words compelled by eloquence to do a master's will. And he who used them so delighted in the music of his voice. He became impatient and imperfect as a listener. He was always waiting for others to get through that he might begin. He demanded that the stage be set, the program built for him.

Not always will men of diction, instead of men of action, have the right of way. Today there are men who suffer greatly as they behold large segments of society apparently stampeded, wrong-headed, obdurate, in the direction of fallacy, by those who use the necromancy of mellifluous words. On runs the lulling stream of language; it catches the light, it tosses and flashes, it foams in pearl and cascades again in silver, it goes up and down, it weaves in and out—and where does it arrive? None knows and none may say. It passed, as the wind ripples over wheat, and left no durable impression.

But in time the deed will find its voice, mightier than the mere delightful sound of those who talked, more potent than the style of him who wrote and had nothing to say, because he never really lived and never did a thing that mattered. The worker will leave his record, when the talk of indolence at last is stilled and the ink of futility is dry.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

German Writes of Lincoln

One of the latest publications on the German book market is a biography of Abraham Lincoln in German. Hitherto only the German translation of the Carl Schurz sketch of Abraham Lincoln's life existed. The author of the German work is Count Albrecht Montgelas. The book has met with a favorable reception by the press. Reviewing it the Vossische Zeitung says: "Despite the obvious thoroughness of Count Montgelas's investigations and research work among the mass of existing Lincoln biographies, his book reads like an interesting short story." Another paper states: "Even among educated Germans, there are not many who fully realize Lincoln's historical importance."

Cats Dodge Electricity

Attendants at the city dog pound are convinced cats either have nine lives or are quicker than electricity. The men have no trouble executing dogs by electrocution, but they have had difficulty sending cats out of the world. Cats taken to the pound for biting persons and later ordered executed have managed to make a flying leap out of the opening to the electric "chair" the instant the current touched them. Sparks even flew from their fur, but otherwise they seemed unhurt. Now the attendants have adopted the expedient of first knocking senseless cats sentenced to death. —Detroit News.

Found Stolen Money

Lynn (Mass.) police were sent to investigate the report that some one had rifled the clothing of the employees of a bakery, and had escaped through a window, taking $50 in bills from the clothing. The policemen examined the window through which the thief was supposed to have left the building. It was only a little jump to the ground and the policemen made it easily. There lay the roll of bills on the ground. The money was returned and all was well.

The Grand Duchess Cyril said many clever things during her American visit. Thus to a New York girl reporter—

"The women most successful with men," said the grand duchess, "are not the beautiful ones, but the wise ones. And the wise ones are those who know that men are only babies with beards."

Australians Claim Hawaiian Ancestry

Many of the Maoris of Australia consider that their race had its origin in Hawaii centuries ago, it has been revealed by Ratina Jakoba, a prominent Maori. He is at Honolulu with a group of Mormon church workers from Australia to visit the famous Mormon temple at Lake Oahu.

Jakoba said that he had traced his ancestry back to a chieftain named Hema, who ruled the island of Hawaii. After a devastating war in which Hema was defeated badly and forced to flee he and a few companions set sail for the south in huge war canoes. Maori legends have it that they landed in New Zealand and lived there for several years. Later Hema returned to Hawaii, where the residents worshiped Io as their supreme being. Hema returned to New Zealand and many people accompanied him. He also took the image of Io.

Country's Manufactures

The last biennial census of manufacturers shows that in 1923 the value of the output of the United States establishments making canned products their primary or secondary business, amounted to $522,763,003. Peas, corn, tomatoes and baked beans are canned in about equal proportion, between 14,000,000 and 15,000,000 cases of each. Peaches head the canned fruits with 7,039,334 cases and raisins, the dried fruits, with 380,068,441 pounds.

Childish Actors Barred

Children under three years of age will not be permitted to appear in moving-picture films in Germany if a bill introduced in the reichstag becomes a law. The bill points out that the nervous and physical strain of facing the bright lights of movie studios is injurious to infants. The bill further provides th children between three and twelve years may not appear in films except by permit of police and school authorities.

The Santa Fe trail will be one hundred years old this year. The Council oak at Council Grove, Kan., has taken on 100 rings since the day in 1825 that the white men and Indians met there to barter for a new trade route to Spanish New Mexico. The Santa Fe trail was the outgrowth. A centenary program is being arranged at Council Grove.

lark, and sang like one. My guide, Emily, suggested that we might try to reach the falls by the route along the river. We made our way through thick ferns and beautiful foliage, over boulders and dead trees. After going about half a mile and the writer having a hard time to keep up with his singing guide, we came to a sign marked "TABOO." We could not continue to the falls. Being all tired out, the notice was welcome to me. After a short rest, we returned and joined the others of the party at the car. Here we spread a most delightful lunch. The driver had returned with a large supply of different kinds of tropical fruits, fresh from the trees. After lunch the native girls danced and sang, and, after a day long to be remembered, we arrived back in Papeete without any mishaps to ourselves or the faithful old Dodge.

A few days after my arrival in Papeete, the racing yachts that had left San Francisco June 10 began to arrive. This race, I believe, was the longest yacht race ever attempted. The first yacht to arrive, the "Mariner," won the race. Next in order came the "Shawnee," "Idalia" and then the "Eloise." The last named had been reported lost, and there was much rejoicing when she came sailing into Papeete harbor. Later on, I was a guest aboard this fine and compact yacht, which is owned by Commodore Piver of San Francisco. And I will not soon forget the coffee that our hostess, Mrs. Piver, had served to us. Good coffee in the cafes in Papeete is unknown, and this was a welcome treat.

As each yacht arrived in Papeete, the governor gave them a reception and a welcome. The writer had the honor of an invitation to these receptions, and I shall long remember the brilliant affairs.

And now comes the grand celebration that takes place every year here, starting on the 4th of July and lasting six days. This fete (as it is called) is in honor of the Fall of the Bastile, which was demolished by the French populace in 1789. The event is celebrated similar to our Fourth of July. About the 12th of July great crowds of natives began arriving from the many islands in this group—many teams of native dancers to dance the hula-hula and compete for the prizes that are presented to the best dancing teams. The dancing takes place in a large field, where judges announce the winners, and the governor presents the prizes. Also a great street fair takes place. Of course there are not the restrictions placed on these celebrations as there would be in our country.

A great and hilarious time takes place, with most everybody going the limit. All kinds of liquors flowed freely, everybody seemed happy, no rowdyism of any kind was in evidence and no drunkenness or disorder. The native faces are wreathed in smiles, and the whites seem to take up the spirit of the occasion. The din and noise is something shocking to ones nerves, in particular where it continues day and night. So, after standing it for three days and nights, I decided to leave Papeete until it quited down and became normal. I could see the island of Moorea in the distance, and had heard about many of its charms. I had also learned that it was very primitive

ARE YOU A CAPITALIST?

Everybody who works and saves something and builds a home or lends his savings to some industry to be used in production is a capitalist.

A member of labor organizations which have banks and other assets is a capitalist.

Every individual who has a savings account is a capitalist.

The greater the supply of capital, the greater will be the demand for labor to make use of that capital.

"If capital is scarce and timid, the demand for labor is less," says Chas. H. Carson of the American Bankers' association. "The more productive capital there is, the more it seeks to be used, the more authority does labor exercise in its demand for wages."

BANKERS HELP

The banks of Bodford county, Tennessee, are furnishing pure bred eggs to all who will agree to return one pullet for each fifteen eggs in the fall.

The Missouri Bankers Association issued the first number of the "Agricultural Information Service Quarterly" in April. This publication deals with timely agricultural subjects of interest to bankers. A discussion of the various projects proposed as a basis for the program of banker-farmer co-operation in Missouri appears in the first issue.

Clearing houses in Georgia have approved a proposal for the expenditure of $30,000 annually for the next three years for the purpose of carrying out a program of farm development and crop diversification in Georgia. The proposal was initiated by the Georgia Bankers Association. The plan calls for the creation of a state-wide development committee of thirty members which will function under the direction of the Agricultural Committee of the Georgia Bankers Association.

Nebraska bankers are going to school. The College of Agriculture is having a short course in agriculture for bankers. Registration is in charge of the Nebraska Bankers Association. The predominant thought is, "Every bank in Nebraska should be represented." Nine out of ten banks in one county have signed attendance cards. Scores of the cards have been received by Dan V. Stephens, chairman of the Agricultural Committee of the Bankers Association, and he has received over a hundred letters on the short course.

"BILLY" ENGLAND SAYS RUBBER SUPPLANTS WOOD IN STORAGE BATTERIES

"The greatest advances in storage battery construction in recent years have been brought about by the use of rubber instead of wood," says William England, the enterprising proprietor of the Mission Beach Garage.

"In Willard batteries especially," says "Billy," who is wise on Willard subjects, "rubber has been adapted to use almost to the total exclusion of wood.

"In a single six-volt Willard battery, rubber is used in five forms, totaling from thirty-five to fifty pieces, according to the size of the battery. These five forms are jars, covers, vent plugs, gaskets and insulation. Where hard rubber is used for the battery case—a most recent development which is becoming more popular—the jars are not needed, as the monobloc case forms its own jars.

SAN DIEGUITO WATER PROPOSITION EXPLAINED BY CITY MANAGER RHODES

At the regular monthly meeting of the O. B. Women's club last Monday evening, City Manager Fred A. Rhodes told about the advantages to be obtained in the purchase of the San Dieguito water system, for which an election will be held on Oct. 8. Besides the interesting talk by Mr. Rhodes, the suggestion was offered by the chair that united support be given to the Smith-Hughes classes now being organized at the Ocean Beach public school. Announcement was also made of the election of Miss Rose Morrison to fill the vacancy on the board of directors caused by the recent passing of Mrs. Charles H. Peltcher. Following the business session, an enjoyable social period was held with refreshments served by Mrs. Emma Winans and Miss Roberta Winans.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON "GOLD BONDS"

"Before I go to the bank to ask advice about investing the money mother left me, I wish you would tell me something more about bonds," said Helen to Aunt Emmy. "Am I right in thinking that gold bonds are absolutely safe? Are gold bonds what people mean by gilt edge securities?"

"What a child it is!" laughed Aunt Emmy. "I can see that you do need to learn something about bonds. The term 'gold bond' does not have anything to do with the term 'gilt edged security.' The latter is nothing more than a commonly used phrase that means a safe security. Companies that issue gold bonds usually agree to redeem them in United States gold coin of the weight and fineness of the gold coin issued by the United States Treasury at the time the bonds are put on the market. This is done in order to protect the bondholders from the very remote possibility of a radical change in the value of United States currency, such as, for example, the changes in the values of German and other European currencies as a result of the war. While such a thing is unlikely to occur in this country, financiers always try to guard against every possible trouble. Although a bond may be payable in gold it is unnecessary to demand payment in actual gold coin since our American money is on a gold basis anyhow and our good old paper dollars have exactly the same value as golden dollars.

"But you want to bear in mind one thing. Because you buy a so-called 'gold bond,' that does not mean that the bond is secured by gold in any way, or that it is stronger than any other bond. The strength of a bond lies simply and only in the ability of the company that issues it to pay its debts. And of course you should consider the value of the property pledged or mortgaged to secure the bond, if any property is given as security."

"Dear me, Aunt Emmy," exclaimed Helen, "I never realized how much one needs to know before investing one's money. In my case it's awfully important not to have a loss, because although I have only a tiny amount of money it is all I have in the world. How can I ever learn to tell what is good from what is bad?"

"I am not sure you ever can rely on your own judgment, my dear," smiled Aunt Emmy, "but if you will be guided by your bank, you needn't worry."—A. B. Aymes.

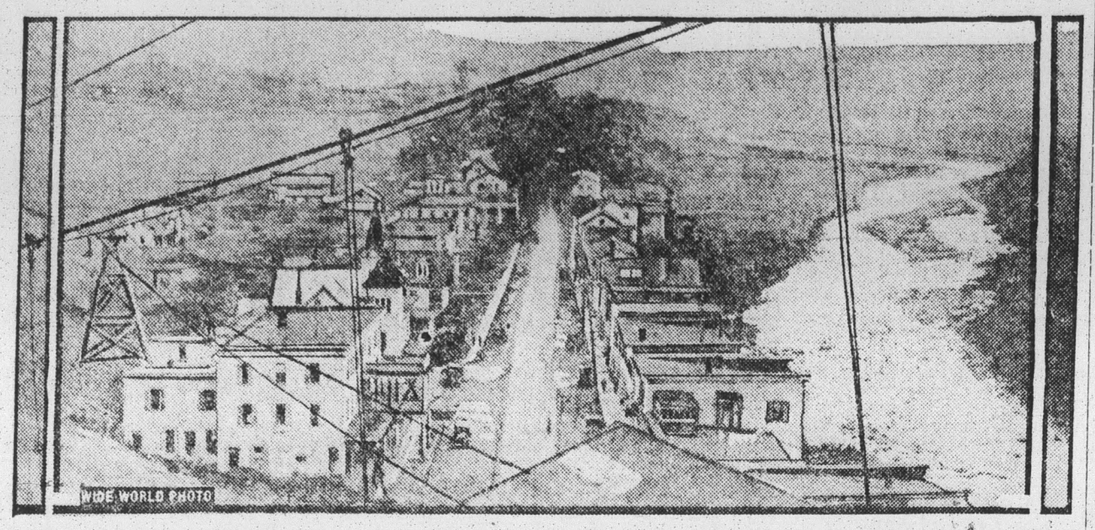
Artificial Lake Will Engulf This Village



The little village of Gilboa, N. Y., once a prosperous farming center, soon will be the bottom of an artificial lake 150 feet deep, five miles long, and holding 22,000,000,000 gallons of water for the supply of New York City. The town dates from 1760. The waters of Schoharie creek, blocked by an enormous dam, will be carried from this artificial lake through eighteen miles of tunnel to feed the Ashokan reservoir. This view of Gilboa is from the top of the dam.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

COPYRIGHT BY WESTERN NEWSPAPER UNION

THE DOUGHNUTS' HOLES

Melly loved to make doughnuts. Her daddy was devoted to them. Crullers he called them. Melly didn't quite know the difference between doughnuts and crullers, or whether there was much difference.

When She Was All Through.

But anyway she knew how to make them

They were light and delicious when Melly made them. They never gave any one indigestion. They were sprinkled with powdered sugar just as they came steaming out of the hot fat and rested on the brown paper until they were cool.

They were round doughnuts with holes in the center. Sometimes Melly tried to drop one into the fat so that it would come the shape of a figure 8.

Usually when she tried to make them a particularly good shape they didn't come out so well as now and again they did by accident.

But they all were excellent to eat and they all were pretty good shapes.

She used to cut out the doughnuts, after the mixture was all finished and when she had rolled them out on the board in the kitchen, which she had covered with flour so they couldn't stick, with a round top of a tin which she had washed carefully first.

Then she had the top of a little tin which she used to make the hole in the center of every doughnut.

That was splendid and she loved the big doughnuts with their round holes.

They were such fat-looking doughnuts. They were such delicious, light doughnuts.

But then she almost liked the holes best of all.

Of course, perhaps they should not be called the holes, as the holes in the doughnuts were the real holes. There was nothing to eat where there was a hole. Of course not. That was absurd.

The doughnuts were plenty big enough without being solid. The holes made the doughnuts just right.

But the parts she had cut out with the smaller tin she cooked in the hot fat after the doughnuts with the holes had been cooked.

She called these the doughnuts' holes. They came out round and chubby and as cunning as could be. She sprinkled these with powdered sugar, too.

When she was all through there were two huge platters covered with doughnuts.

On one platter were the doughnuts without the holes.

On the other platter were the holes!

Yes, what had been taken out of every doughnut in order to make the hole was now a delicious little doughnut itself.

Quite different in shape to be sure, but extremely good to eat!

How pleased her father was on doughnut day. How he did ask for doughnuts every night from then on, until the doughnuts were all gone.

How Pleased Her Father Was.

How he complimented her upon the way she could make them.

"No one," he said, "could make such delicious doughnuts. No one at all."

He liked the little ones, too. He always called them the "little fellers."

"Give me another little feller, Melly," he would say. And Melly would give him another one.

But she never called them anything else but the doughnuts' holes.

And sometimes she thought they were pretty smart, even though she had helped them so much, to come out as such good things to eat when they had, in a way, been merely holes.

Yes, she really thought a great deal of them!

Improved Plan of Phone Connection

Elimination of Direct Current From Reproducing Unit—Less Noise.

A great amount of unnecessary noise is produced in many radio sets by the common method of connecting the phones or loudspeaker directly in the plate circuit of the last tube. This arrangement permits the direct current from the B battery to flow through the reproducing unit. The result is that the diaphragm is drawn slightly toward the poles of the magnets and if too much amplification is used the diaphragm strikes the magnets.

Another disadvantage in placing the phones directly in the plate circuit is that any slight fluctuations in the direct current due to poor B batteries or loose contacts pull the diaphragm toward the magnets and sends out a mechanical noise. If the proper lead from the phones or loudspeaker is not connected to the sensitive B battery, the direct current in the plate circuit will demagnetize the iron poles and in time ruin the unit.

All of these faults can be remedied by the use of the current shown in the accompanying drawing. Here the direct current from the B battery flows through an impedance coil and only the alternating component of the plate current passes through the condenser and loudspeaker. The impedance coil can be the primary of any standard amplifying transformer or the primary of a bell-ringing transformer. The condenser should have a capacity of at least one mfd.

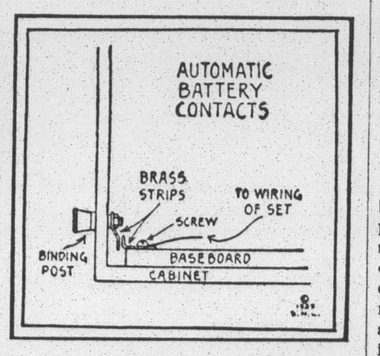
If this circuit is used with the same amount of B battery as was used when the speaker was connected in the plate circuit, a decrease in volume will be noted. Placing a high impedance in the circuit causes a decrease in the actual plate potential. Signals can be brought back to normal, however, by increasing the plate voltage on the last tube.

An Easy Way to Remove Receiver From Cabinet

If you have a radio set that you are continually experimenting with and remove from the cabinet frequently, here is a tip which is well worth the time and trouble of installation.

You all know what it means every time the set is removed from the cabinet. There are from four to eight wires to take off and put on. There is a certain element of risk entailed when removing and replacing the wires. It is very easy when disconnecting the A or B batteries to drop a wire which accidentally connects with another one causing a short that might burn up a tube or tuning unit, or run down the batteries.



How to Construct Make-and-Break Contact Arrangement.

The drawing illustrates a very good idea and shows clearly how to construct a make-and-break contact arrangement so that when the set is removed from the case the battery connections are automatically broken.

The contacts should be made of sheet brass so that they will not easily break or lose their tension when bent. The binding posts are mounted at the rear of the cabinet. On the back of the posts are mounted the brass strips which are bent out from the cabinet. Other brass strips are fastened to the baseboard or set and bent up so that they will come in contact with the other strips attached to the binding posts on the cabinet.—Philadelphia Record.

Pointers for Builder on Placement of Dial

In fixing the dial on the front of the panel which connects to a variable condenser, first place the rotor plates all the way in between the stator plates. Move the dial until it reads 100 on the marker on the panel and then fasten the set screw. The dial reading will now read zero when the capacity is in use. Use care in mounting the apparatus on the panel so as not to force any part of the condenser. If it will not go easily redrill the panel or enlarge the holes drilled until it can be mounted easily. Tighten up the mounting screw or nut until the condenser is rigid on the panel

Community Building

Big Factor in Life Is Desire for Home

The longing for a home has always been—it is and always will be—the one universal desire of mankind. Around your own fireside abide tender memories—within the seclusion of your home are new desires awakened.

It is the one place where a welcome awaits you, where you may hide from a busy world and rest, where you may forget for a time, the traits of life and feast upon the pleasure of living.

Wherever you may be, wherever you may return to—and that place spot is somewhere—some resort of love and joy and peace and plenty, that you may return to—that place could be no other than home.

Deep in the heart of every man is that unsatiable desire to be the master of his own home. The American will never be content as long as he continues to dole out his monthly percentage to the ever ambitious rent collector.

Picture, if you can, the typical American paying rent. Can you imagine Lincoln, Garfield, Hayes or McKinley meeting the rent collector at the door every month with the rent? Imagine Theodore Roosevelt scratching his head and wondering where he will move next, as he has just received notice to vacate.—Detroit Free Press.

Beauty of Home Lies in Factor of Dignity

The beauty of any home lies not in its acreage, or its surroundings, but rather in that vague intangible which may be called "atmosphere." This is made up of a feeling of quiet, dignified simplicity and a love of quality which is too infrequently encountered in this day of elaborate decoration.

Concessions to modern ideas are responsible for the use of overdecorated homes. Each home owner must solve the problem of his own home and infuse into its arrangements distinctive features which portray his own artistic tastes and personality.

Well-finished floors are in themselves a thing of beauty, while soft-toned walls shaded by colorful effects in lighting arrangements, and simple and tasteful pieces of furniture make any room comfortable and restful. Perhaps in no other type of interior decorating can there be found such a display of taste and thoughtfulness as in the real old New England colonial homes. They reflect the best of the colonial days in simplicity and harmony

Remodeling Pays

Houses, like clothes and customs, get out of date. The needs of the family grow as well as the means of satisfying them. New conveniences and equipment come into vogue and ideas of household use and arrangement change. To meet these new needs and fashions it is not always necessary to build a new house, especially if the old house was built of wood; for it is one of the great merits of wood that it is adaptable to changes in taste and style. Wood is like the goods from which clothing is made, in that it can be cut to suit any fancy.

The rejuvenating of homes that do not fill the needs or notions of the owners offers sales opportunities where entire houses are out of the question. For all practical purposes the same ends can be achieved by remodeling.

"Freak" Homes Not Wise

He who builds a house does not build for himself alone. A house is part of a community. As such it is subjected to continued scrutiny and comparison. The builder of a well-designed and beautiful home becomes recognized as a person of good taste and sound judgment. Artistic effect is very much to be desired also from the standpoint of the owner himself. It adds to property values. In the exterior design of the house it is well to place reliance upon well-established types of architecture and not resort to the unusual or the untried. Odd or unusual designs often become tiresome; they are likely to be expensive and inharmonious as well.

Proper Care of Trees

In the care of one's yard caution should be taken against irregular growth of trees and means adopted to rectify any fault in the tree's growth at the start. Many trees are inclined to lean in a certain direction through being forced into that position by prevailing winds from the opposite point, and, unless braced while young, it will be impossible for them to grow upright as they should. It is well that a sufficient space be spaded up around the tree, and the ground kept worked and properly fertilized.

Mennonites in Canada

More than 10,000 Mennonites from Europe have already settled in Canada and 25,000 more are expected, according to Col. John Stoughton Dennis, chief commissioner of the department of colonization and development of the Canadian Pacific railway. Colonel Dennis has gone to Europe to speed up the tide of immigration to Canada from Northwestern Europe, for which Canada is waiting. About 5,000,000 acres of farm land await these newcomers, Colonel Dennis said, upon sailing in March.

TOPCOAT FOR AUTUMN WEAR; PARIS BLOUSES VARIED IN MODE

IF IN quest of a modish autumn wrap consider the comeliness of the full-length knitted coat as it appears among advance style showings. Recalling the knitted coat in the beginning of its career and comparing with today's achievements its record is that of handsome, handsomer unto handsomest.

Owing to its smart appearance, expressed through a conservative elegance which has been artfully achieved through intriguing colorings and masterly styling, the advance knitted coats are creating a thrill of genuine enthusiasm throughout the length and features a very handsome knitted coat model which preserves a conventional straightline contour. In its jacquard patterning it achieves a color charm through the interworking of black, brown and yellow on a white background.

If preference trends to solid colorings the knitted coat also answers the call, in exceptionally good-looking modes which carry a monotone scheme throughout, by means of clever knitted stitchery.

Increased attention given to details in design and a partiality for plaits for the purpose of elaboration breadth of fashiondom. The newer models bear a marked look of distinction in that they feature arresting details in collar, cuff and skirt flare which at once appeal to the woman who is sensitive to good styling.

Coats for fall will be longer, at least this is so as far as knitted modes are concerned. The picture herewith corroborates the statement. The jacquard design which is described is a prevailing theme throughout things knitted. Through clever jacquard patternings color harmonies and contrasts are effectively set forth. The embellishment of brushed wool in form of collar, cuffs and skirt flare border, enhances not only the coat in the illustration, but is a generally approved trimming for this season's knitted topcoats.

In its autumnal color appeal the knitted coat becomes a matter of natural selection for the forthcoming months. The glory of harvest coloring is realized in a long coat of hunter's green, recently on exhibition among styles, to be. It was patterned with ruddy-brown and gold-yellow interknitted design. It claimed no trimming, depending upon its classic tailored aspect for patrician appearance, stressing such style points as a generous collar with low-reaching lapels, also flap pockets and turn-back cuffs.

The single-breasted fastening also appear in the new blouses arriving from Paris. In these matters they are simply following the lead of the mode in other outer garments and are especially noticeable in tailored styles. Here plaits can be introduced without changing clean, mannish lines and it is a nice discrimination that makes it possible to elaborate the tailored mode without the "fussiness" that has no place in it.

Practically all of the new blouses are long-sleeved, but there is quite a variety in these sleeves and in neck treatments. In the latter the line high at the back and "V" shaped in front is found to be very generally becoming. High collars buttoning up the front, and high-necked scarf treatments and the tie neck finish are all style details that have been indorsed.

Paris sends over the blouse pictured as a good example of one phase of the tailored modes in blouses. It is made of silk crepe and depends upon narrow plaits and small incrustations of embroidered net for its garnishment. Presumably it is to be regarded as a substitute for the severely plain tailored blouse of silk crepe which has borne the plain tailored suit company heretofore. It will be noticed in this model that the overblouse has increased a little in length and that the narrow girdle made of crepe like the blouse shows a bit of embroidered decoration. Below it the plaits are free. A shirt-bosom front very much lengthened is indicated by a band of the crepe garnished with groups of narrow plaits.

THE HAUNTED PESOS

By FREDERICK F. MOORE

(© by Short Story Pub. Co.)

TWO thousand Filipinos were standing in line before the window of the paymaster of the army transport service, waiting to get their wages for the week, in bright new silver pesos.

"I hope," said Felipe Lopez, a cargo checker, "that none of my pesos will have the mark of blood on them. It is bad enough to work six days in the hot sun for twenty pesos, but after you get them it is worse to have the ghost of a miser running through your house trying to take them away from you, and probably kill you in the bargain."

Francisco Basa, a laborer, who was next to Lopez in the line, shivered and rolled a cigarette to steady his nerves.

"What is this about the haunted pesos?" he asked.

"What!" exclaimed Felipe, "have you not heard? All the Filipinos know the story. Have you not heard of the American miser who saved his silver pesos until he had a room full of them in a house in Paco? And how he was robbed and killed, and cursed the robber with his dying breath, and swore that every peso would have a drop of blood on it and that he would haunt every man who kept or used the money? Everybody knows of the story."

The natives near Felipe drew up to him with terror in their faces and asked about this awful story of the haunted pesos, for Filipinos are very superstitious and believe in ghosts and bad omens and evil eyes and curses.

"It is a very simple tale," said Felipe, when they pressed him to tell them about the haunted pesos. "There was an American who saved all the pesos he earned as a government engineer. He had his house half full of them out in Paco. It is the house where Ledesma, the Filipino patriot, lived before the war with the Americans, and you all know it. It has a yard and tall iron fence around it and no one lives there now, for the spirit of the miser haunts it. He has been seen walking through the grounds by night and no one dares go near it.

"Some American soldiers killed him and took the money. They cut his throat with a saber. As he was lying on the floor, dying, they filled sacks with the pesos. He cursed them as he was lying in his blood, and said that whoever should have a peso of his would be haunted. 'You will bring these pesos back here,' he told them, 'and throw them into my yard by night. I will haunt you until you do it and then I will strangle you in your beds as you sleep. And any man who shall have one of these pesos and use it for his benefit in any way will have my curse, and unless he comes and throws the pesos into my yard, I will haunt him as long as he lives, and will strangle him and his wife and children. These pesos shall be known by a spot of my blood over the eagle. Sometimes it will not be there and sometimes it will be seen. When that spot of blood comes over the eagle on the peso, it is a warning, and unless it is thrown into my yard by night I will kill the man who keeps it or gives it in trade for goods for his household or food or drink for himself and children. This curse I put upon all who shall handle my pesos, and then he died, spitting blood at the robbers, which fell on the silver coins.

"Last week," continued Felipe, "I found two pesos in my pocket with the spot of blood on them. It was not there when I got the money, but the blood spots came out while it was in my pocket. I knew it was the miser's curse and warning, so that night I went to Paco and threw them into the yard of the house where the miser lived. They are there now, and whoever wants them may get them, unless the ghost of the miser has taken them away. I knew better than to use the money—I want no bony fingers at my throat in the night—I want to wake up in the morning. So you may save your lives and the lives of your wives and children if you heed my counsel. If you find some day that you have a haunted peso, I would advise you to throw it back to the miser.

"The robbers were all killed. The three of them were found dead, one after the other, and on their throats were the red marks where the fingers of the miser's ghost had strangled them, and their tongues were hanging out and their faces were blue and their eyes staring, as if they could see the spirit of the man they robbed. It all came to pass as he said it would. A Filipino was found last week in a town in Cavite, strangled in his bed. No one knew who had killed him. But a friend of mine told me that a peso with a spot of blood on it was found in his room. I said nothing, but of course it was a haunted peso, and that is why he died. Perhaps he did not know of the curse. But I do, and if I ever find another peso with the blood on it, I know where it will go. You may do as you choose, but I love my life too well to sell it for a peso."

The paymaster wondered why every man who was paid that day examined his pesos carefully before leaving the window. He supposed there were counterfeits in circulation and that the laborers were afraid of getting bad coins.

Francisco Basa, the man who had asked Felipe to tell him the story of the haunted pesos, looked at his money the next morning, and was horrified to discover that two of his pesos had the fatal blood spots.

He called his wife and in terror they both agreed that they were possessed of haunted pesos, and that they would hurl them into the yard of the Paco house as soon as it became dark. The two pesos were sadly needed, it was true, but what were two pesos, if throwing them back to the miser would protect them from his curse?

So after his day's work loading and unloading ships, Francisco went to Paco, shivering with fear, and imagining that every palm tree along Calle Real concealed the spirit of the miser, and that the terrible ghostly fingers were reaching for his throat.

There seemed to be a great many Filipinos hurrying along Calle Real. They all went by the Ledesma house in the darkness and then started back the way they had come from Manila.

Francisco furtively threw his pesos over the fence and went back to the city with the others. When he had come to the Luneta, where the band was playing, he met Pascual Romero, who also worked for the government unloading steamers.

"Where have you been, Pascual?" he asked.

"I have been in Paco," replied Pascual. "Let us walk around and hear the band play. How is your wife's brother doing with his fish store?"

"Good," replied Francisco, but his mind was not on the fish store.

"I found two haunted pesos in my purse this morning," said Francisco, his fingers trembling as he lit a cigarette.

"You were lucky," said Pascual; "I had the misfortune to find that I had four. I threw them back to the miser and glad I am that I did so. Have you kept yours?"

"Mother of God, no! I cast the accursed things away. Does a man risk his life for two pesos?"

"Others have found the blood spots on their money, I am told. There is no mistaking them. The spots show over the eagle. They are spots of dried blood and there can be no doubt that they are the miser's coins."

For three months the two thousand Filipinos employed by the government in the transport service found haunted pesos, and every week they journeyed to Paco by night and threw the coins into the yard of the Ledesma house. Then they found no more and came to the conclusion that the spirit of the dead miser had his own again and was at peace. They were well pleased, for they found their wages were being depleted by the tribute to the ghost of the pesos.

But no one had been strangled. So the story told by Felipe Lopez had warned all the natives of Manila and had doubtless saved many lives.

* * * * * * *

It is a pity that some of the facts bearing directly on the haunted pesos must in justice be told to those who have followed the tale thus far.

Some weeks before Felipe Lopez told his story, a chemist employed in the government laboratory at Manila was sharing a room with a man from Connecticut. The latter was employed in the Philippine treasury and made up the money for the various government bureaus, including the transport service, which was used to pay salaries.

The man from Connecticut was a typical New England Yankee, with the nasal twang common to that region, and he had the reputation of being very shrewd.

The chemist one night gave him a peso which had a dark red spot on it. "It does not show at once," exclaimed the chemist, "but the spot comes out in a day or two, and lasts for a couple of weeks, when it fades again. Looks like a spot of blood, doesn't it?"

"Yes," said the Connecticut man, and smoked several cigars in silence. Then he went and had a long talk with an intelligent native named Felipe Lopez, who was a cargo checker for the army transport service.

About the time the Filipinos got no more haunted pesos in their wages, a government chemist and an employee of the treasury resigned and took passage for the United States on a steamer. Both of them had plenty of money.

Felipe Lopez owns a moving-picture theater in Manila and no more checks cargoes for the transport service while the sun is hot, for twenty pesos a week.

Any man who thinks he would not fear the spirit of the miser and would like to go to the house in Paco and gather up the haunted pesos, need not take the trouble, for the ghost got the money which was thrown into the yard of the Ledesma residence. At least, the money is not there now, according to several Filipinos.

One Goat Brings $775

At a goat sale in San Angelo, Texas, recently one registered Angora buck sold for $775. The sale was the first of its kind in the country, attracting 2,000 persons from all the western states. The sale was made the occasion of a big outing in the woods nearby and nearly all the visitors camped out.

CANNING TIME TABLE IS QUITE USEFUL

Blanching and Processing Fruits and Vegetables.

The following time table shows the blanching time required for the various vegetables and fruits, and also the time for processing in a hot-water bath outfit, and a steam-pressure canner. The periods given in this table are for quart jars. Add 30 minutes for 2-quart jars and deduct 5 minutes for pint jars.

For a few vegetables, such as corn, beans, peas and asparagus, the United States Department of Agriculture recommends that when a hot-water outfit is used in the South, they be processed intermittently, that is, from one to one and a half hours on three successive days.

CORN GIVES MOST CANNING TROUBLE

Speed and Care Demanded in Following Directions.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Corn seems to give the average home canner more trouble than any other product. It is especially important, therefore, that extreme care be used and that directions be carefully followed. Much depends upon the age and condition of the corn. Select fresh, tender, juicy corn which has not reached the starchy stage. A little experience in selecting the ear and the ability to recognize corn that is just between the milky and dough stage are important.

Have the utensils in readiness before starting. The jars (already tested for leaks) and tops should be boiled 15 minutes and then be left in the hot water until ready for use. The rubbers should be placed in a hot soda solution made with one tablespoon soda and one quart of boiling water. If a hot-water bath canner is used (either homemade or commercial), have the water heating in it before starting to cut the corn from the cob. A steam-pressure canner is recommended for use in the canning of corn. If used, the water in it should be started to heating beforehand. A container of boiling water should be in readiness in which to blanch the corn.

Blanch the Corn in Hot Water.

Cut From the Cob.

Remove husks and silk; blanch (boil) corn for one to five minutes on the cob. Dip for an instant in cold water. After cold dip, cut immediately off cob with a sharp, thin-bladed knife.

Speed is requisite in successful canning of corn. The best results can be obtained when one person cuts the corn from the cob and another fills the containers. Pack the corn to within one inch of the top. Add one level teaspoon of salt and one-half teaspoon of sugar to each quart. Fill the jars with boiling water. Put rubbers and tops into position on the jars. When using jars with glass tops which have wire bails the top bail only should be put in place.

Place the filled jars on false bottom of wood in the water-bath container or into the steam-pressure canner. With the hot-water bath canner have the water above the tops of the cans.

When one period of processing is used, boil steadily for 180 minutes, starting to count time after the water is boiling vigorously. If the intermittent processing is used, boil 1½ hours the first day and 1 hour on the two succeeding days, allowing only 12 to 18 hours between the first and second processing periods. Tighten the jar tops after each boiling and loosen just before the successive boiling.

Pack Corn in Jars.

Only one period of processing is necessary with the steam-pressure cooker. When one is used, process corn 80 minutes under 15 pounds pressure at a temperature of 250° F.

When jars are removed from the canner, tighten tops immediately. Cool in a place away from drafts, test the seal, and store in a cool, dark, dry place.

Wrap and Store in Cool, Dark Place.

Custard Desserts

"Floating island" is a custard dessert with the stiffly beaten, sweetened whites served on top of the custard, after having been cooked a moment in the hot milk before the yolks and sugar were added.

An English dessert called "trifle" consists of pieces of almond-studded sponge cake, soaked in flavored cooked soft custard, and topped off with bits of tart jelly and spoonfuls of whipped cream.

For cornstarch blancmange, vanilla or chocolate gelatins, fruit gelatins, souffles and steamed puddings, custard sauce will be acceptable if cream cannot be spared.

Some Canning Essentials

Clean, fresh fruit and vegetables.

Containers which can be made air-tight.

Rubber rings possessing life and elasticity.

Care and cleanliness from start to finish.

Heat for a sufficient time to insure preservation.

Air-tight sealing at end of "processing."

Cool, dark, dry storage.

MAN POWER vs. DOLLAR POWER

Folks:—

Did you ever stop to think what a powerful thing a dollar really is? Did it ever strike you that just one lonely dollar, invested in the right place, has more earning power than the ordinary worker with his two hands? All true, you may say, but how am I to know the right spot? Not so difficult as you may think. Certain fundamental principles must be recognized, for instance, we are told, and we believe it to be authentic, than 9 out of every 10 people who are worth $10,000 or more, made their money in real estate. We all know that a good investment is worth a lifetime of labor, and it is true that we should value that which we now possess too much to gamble with it.

The thing that we should seek in our investment is the greatest return that we may possibly expect, safety considered. Real estate certainly is the safest investment in the world, because it is a commodity that no one can steal, fire cannot destroy, that rust cannot corrode, and that moths cannot eat. It is the basis of all wealth. Attached to proper location, in a growing community, somewhere in the land of development, properly restricted, properly improved, and with proper transportation, you have an ideal investment.

Folks, San Diego is going to grow in the near future, I believe, as she has never dreamed of growing before. Property values will increase by leaps and bounds, probably over-night. The world has been seeking San Diego. It has just now found it.

Put your dollars to work for you now, today, in San Diego real estate, and in my estimation your investment will be successful beyond your wildest dreams, particularly in that section of San Diego which we are now developing on Point Loma.

My business has increased so rapidly that we are now finding it necessary to hold daily sales on this property. We serve luncheon daily at 12:30 at the big tent which is located on Point Loma, one block southwest of the intersection of Voltaire and Chatsworth Boulevard. An interesting and instructive lecture on San Diego and Point Loma is also being given daily at 1 o'clock, without charge or obligation.

Yours for a Greater San Diego,

"The past was real. The present, all about me, was unreal, unnatural, repellent. I saw the big ships lying in the stream, the Alert, the California, the Rosa with her Italians; then the handsome Ayacucho, my favorite; the poor dear old Pilgrim, the home of hardship and helplessness; the boats passing to and fro; the cries of the sailors at the capstan or falls; the peopled beach; the large hide-houses with their gangs of men; and the Kanakas interspersed everywhere. All, all were gone!"

Picnics were held from the earliest times at the site of the lighthouse. Meriendas, they were still called in 1855. Indians had their fishing grounds and camping coves all along the shores here. Ejected from gold diggings of the north, Chinamen drifting down the coast, stuck here. Their dirty junks, their fish-drying racks, picturesque dabs upon the radiant blue and gold scenery.

and had only a few white residents. This information seemed to please my fancy. I found upon inquiry that an Englishman by the name of Trower kept a nice small hotel, called Hotel Faatoai, on a lovely bay by that name. So, armed with a fine letter of introduction from my genial host, Oscar, I was pepared to start for my primitive island. The power schooner "Mitiaro" was to sail at 8 a. m., but it was after 2 p. m. when this little vessel got under way. We had a kind of general cargo. The passengers consisted of natives and Chinese. I was the only white person aboard. Presumably the other passengers knew where they were going—but I didn't care much, so long as the boat took me to some primitive island and away from the big noise at Papeete. The natives were eating some fruit, and kindly offered me some, which I accepted with thanks.

The sea was nice and smooth, and our first stop was at Ofareaitu, a small village which nestled close to the shore and amidst tall cocoanut trees. A neat looking little church with a towering white spire loomed up among the houses of the little village. This first stop was on the east side of the island. We were soon on our way again, and came in sight of Fautaua about 6:15. The sun was setting. I had often heard of the beautiful sunsets in the tropics, but I never expected anything like this. My vocabulary is not sufficient to express the glory of this panorama, and I do not think it possible to paint anything near like it. We were soon ashore, on a rickety old wharf. I was met by a Chinaman from the hotel. We had about a quarter of a mile to walk through the darkness and over a rough road. We could see a few native houses as we trudged along. I was now in the land of the primitive—and that is what I came to the South Seas for.

At last we arrived at a neat looking building with a red roof, surrounded by cocoanut and many other tropical fruit trees. It was the hotel. A man called me by name, and that sounded good. It was Major Edington, a retired English major, whom I had met in Papeete. Of course he was glad to see me—as I was him. He was the only guest stopping at the hotel. I was shown to a nice, clean room, and soon after a splendid dinner was served me by the Chinese boy. The dining room at this hotel, as in most all others in the tropics, is on the veranda. This inn had about nine rooms for guests, and was built high up from the ground—I presume in order to keep the land crabs and other crawling things out, also to keep the water from rushing in when the heavy rains fall, which occur in their summer season. This, of course, is just the reverse of ours, as the seasons change at the equator. The cook house and shower bath are separate from the hotel building. The proprietor is the owner of a large vanilla plantation, cocoanut groves and a steam schooner. He is one of the four white men who reside on this island.
